MICROFINANCE – THE CRUCIAL LINK IN INDIA'S INCLUSIVENESS

Microfinance in India is more than just an economic tool, often representing the empowerment of historically marginalized and financially dependent communities.

To break financial shackles, marginalised groups in rural areas traditionally formed self-help groups, where resources were pooled and distributed to those in need. The government made the decision to link these groups to banks and other financial institutions, a scheme that was developed by the National Bank for Agriculture and Rural Development. Under the scheme, small, easy-access loans are provided to segments that are conventionally deemed ineligible for credit. This was seen as a desirable alternative to other financing means such as the spread of commercial banks to rural areas and the simplification of lending procedures for rural financial institutions. The biggest target group involved in the world of microfinance is women in rural areas, who are otherwise oppressed. A staggering 99% of the beneficiaries of microfinance are women in India. This has helped bring financial inclusion to millions of rural families.

SOCIAL ENTERPRISE = IMPACT + BUSINESS SUCCESS

In the past decade, India has witnessed considerable growth in its social enterprise activity. The number and quality of innovative ideas and business plans has improved due to growing awareness, support, and quality training and workshops available for social entrepreneurs and social enterprise leaders. The social enterprise ecosystem has evolved with support organisations providing direct, indirect, financial, and advisory assistance to social enterprises. Despite the developing ecosystem and valued potential of the sector, the literature on social enterprises in India is small. Given the growth over the past decade, the Indian social enterprise ecosystem is only expected to grow exponentially with a wide and growing range of domestic and international investors and support organisations that are beginning to understand its relevance.

CLIMATE CHANGE & SUSTAINABILITY

Is India a Solution to the Problem or a Problem to the Solution?

India is the fourth largest energy consumer in the world, all set to overtake China in the next decade if the global energy consumption growth is to be believed. However, India ranks the lowest in the per-capita consumption of electricity, thus making energy paucity, a raging challenge. Governments both past and present proposed an ambitious energy revolution, but still have been unable to improve the energy crisis. There have been systematic efforts to develop the prospects and measure growth of deriving energy from various non-conventional sources such as Solar, Wind, Hydroelectricity; various alternative energy sources such as Nuclear Energy, Biogas and Natural Gas. For India, a large country both populated and poor, to develop in an environmentally sustainable manner is not an option but a requirement.
